Freddie Mac Foundation's
Wednesday's Child

Not all children get the same start in life, leaving some with more challenges from the get-go. Despite having some challenges right out of the gate, this week's Wednesday's Child also has the spirit, energy and charm to balance out those challenges.

You wouldn't know it from watching him run, jump and climb around now, but Angel (2009) was born premature with torticollis and respiratory issues. He is making great progress with some good services in place. Angel still has some developmental delays but is receiving related services and is progressing well. He is starting to talk but mainly understands Spanish.

In many ways Angel is a regular rough-and-tumble child who loves to play with other children. Angel is still in the stage of enjoying extensive games of peek-a-boo and giggling a lot. As Angel continues to make developmental strides, we are looking to provide him with a solid foundation in the form of a supportive adoptive family from which he can safely explore the world – from playgrounds today to endless possibilities beyond! Tune in to this week's Wednesday's Child to see more of Angel. For more information about Angel and adoption call
