Freddie Mac Foundation's
Wednesday's Child

Some people just naturally have talent, charisma and soul. Bobby, born in 1995, seems to be one of those people. This young man's got a lot of depth as well as interests that are sophisticated for his age. And if he looks familiar, it may be because this is not his Wednesday's Child debut – we first met up with him about two years ago on the set of the enigmatic play "Pippin."

Back then, Bobby was trying to start a Shakespeare club at his school and form a Shakespearean production for a school play. This may seem dated for a 21st century teen, but Bobby recognizes that the Shakespearean period has a profound effect on today's expressive language. Bobby also appreciates that in the days of yore, pursuing one's ideals was seen as noble.

Today Bobby continues his noble quest to find a family to call his own, and what better way than to let others see him in his element again. Bobby wants to go into acting and music, so this time we met up with Bobby at Medieval Times in Buena Park, California where he got a behind-the-scenes look at the theatrics of this popular show.

Our Wednesday's Child partner KLAC Radio hosted this evening's event and the audience included some previous Wednesday's Child children and their adoptive families. Bobby seized the moment and got into character and costume and learned all that was "medieval" – from mounting and riding a horse to jostling with weapons of the time – under the close supervision of seasoned professionals.

As he interacted with (and even interviewed) the cast of the show, it became clear that Bobby has much potential as well as that natural charisma that draws people in. What he's still lacking, though, is a permanent family that can help him harness his strengths and develop a noble inner character that will guide him on the stage of life.

Just as in Shakespearean and Medieval times when bravery and honor was everything, we acknowledge the bravery of this dynamic youth to share a bit of himself with us once more. If you recognize the honor it is to make a difference in the life of youth and you can see Bobby playing a role as part of your future family, please don't hesitate to contact us – time isn't truly standing still.
