Freddie Mac Foundation's
Wednesday's Child

This week's Wednesday's Child features Cayden and Serenity, an adorable sibling set with winning personalities. Cayden was born in 2006 and his sister Serenity was born in 2007. Both children love to explore so we brought them to Paint Box Kids in Pasadena, California to allow them to explore their creative sides.

At their ages, Cayden and Serenity still marvel with "oohs and ahs" at some of the most simple things, like opening up a fresh box of crayons and having clean crisp sheets of paper on which to draw. Children need a place to express themselves and let their imaginations run wild in a safe and encouraging environment. Too often the structure of foster care or even child-care impedes the expression and imagination of kids that is so vital at this age.

The project for this day's excursion was "Me" and involved making a paper model of one self. Cayden and Serenity each chose colors that express themselves to make the models in their own likeness. You can't see it here but Cayden made his "mini me" with a long pony tail just like he likes to wear. Cayden is the more outgoing one of these siblings and can talk up a storm while Serenity will usually answer in a simpler and direct fashion and then throw you a little smile.

Both children are sensitive and loving and want to know as much as they can about their environment. Both children crave time, attention and stability as they continue to develop their own sense of self. We're looking for a family who will provide a safe and loving home and family environment in which these adorable siblings can find and express themselves – both as individuals as well as members of a forever family.
