Freddie Mac Foundation's
Wednesday's Child

One often hears that kids grow up too fast. In a blink of an eye those precious childhood years are gone and they're on their own before you know it. For most parents, that's a bittersweet time that occurs after years of "life moments" together. For children who enter into foster care at an early age, some of those important milestones, rites of passages and other "life moments" can be compromised or missed altogether.

This week, Wednesday's Child went to visit with Luis. Born in 2008, Luis can be a particular and strong-willed child but is also full of love and giggles nonetheless. While he's physically healthy, he is still learning to speak his first words while having to communicate his needs in other ways. He likes to stay active and loves his toys such as blocks and cuddly stuffed animals. Riding in his little car, Luis explores his environment at his own pace.

Luis does have some delays and will require special services, some of which are already in place for him. Luis is of Native American ancestry and we're looking for a family that can help preserve that cultural element for him.

Luis has many years of growth ahead of him. We're looking for a loving and patient family that will support Luis' growth and help him reach his potential while sharing those "life moments" with him and embracing his cultural heritage.

Ready to explore your potential as Luis' forever family? We're sure that adopting Luis is going to be a joyful milestone in some family's life.
