Freddie Mac Foundation's
Wednesday's Child

Sean (1996) has a passion for cars. This interest started when Sean was a mere toddler – and it stuck. Thanks to our friends at Mercedes Benz, we were able to spend some time with Sean at the exclusive Mercedes Benz Classic Center in Irvine, California. Sean's Wednesday's Child adventure started (and ended) in style as he was transported in the newly released 2012 Mercedes Benz S400 hybrid.

Once at the Center, Sean got a hands-on and informative tour covering the very first Mercedes ever built to some rare exotic cars and everything in between. A little reserved at first, Sean admired the cars from afar. To encourage him to get a little more hands-on, we issued Sean a crew member uniform.

Of all the cars he saw, Sean's favorite was a 1950's 300SL Gullwing, made famous in the classic James Bond movies. As he got more comfortable, Sean began to talk about various chassis of cars and how to detail them appropriately. He even spoke in detail on how to remove rust from stainless steel with the nodding agreement of the pros at Mercedes Benz.

For children who have spent a number of years in foster care, it's not uncommon for them to be cautious and take baby steps when interacting with people and/or considering promising prospects. They often need a special kind of repeated reassurance, the kind that a permanent family can give.

Sean's career goal is to work in auto mechanics someday. And while Sean can remain thankful to members of his biological family for instilling an interest in and knowledge about cars, Sean is in need of an understanding, steady and supportive adoptive family to help him navigate the causeway of life and determine the right time and place for pit-stops in order to avoid big pitfalls. If you can picture your family as part of Sean's permanent "pit crew", wave us in by calling the number below.
